

500 COAL PIRATES ROUNDED UP BY U. S.

Government Cites Figures to Show That "War" Is "Getting Somewhere."

Nearly 500 soft coal profiteers have been rounded up by Federal district attorneys, in the Department of Justice's latest campaign to eliminate extortion and effect reduction in the retail price paid by the consumer. This number, including both cases in which indictments have been returned by grand juries, and cases in which proof has been assembled ready for submission, will be greatly increased within the next thirty days. An even larger number of profiteers caught would be shown by the records, except for the fact in some judicial districts courts and grand juries have not been in session and have not held regular sessions during the summer period.

As evidence that the department is "getting somewhere" with its boast that the consumer will be given lower soft coal prices, officials said in the southern district of West Virginia alone about 100 cases, involving illegal selling practices by operators and jobbers, have been brought in the Federal court. An equally large number of cases is expected to be shown in the northern district of West Virginia. The grand jury in the northern district begins its session on September 13, at Martinsburg, W. Va., and a volume of proof is prepared ready for speedy action against violators.
